PREFACE

This document of the Third National Development Plan represents a summary of the main results of an extensive process of preparation for the development of the Kingdom during the five year period 1400 - 1405. It, therefore, represents the contribution of many people throughout the country, who are engaged in numerous different activities and organizations in both the Government and the private sector, yet who have a common concern for the development of the country. At the same time, the National Development Plan represents substantially more than the sum total of individual contributions; it is a consistent statement of ideas and programs for action, founded on a broad agreement on the national priorities, and on an objective assessment of the economy's capabilities for development.

The Third Development Plan as a whole consists of three main parts:

First, the general guidelines and policies for development during the Third Plan Period, which will be followed by the government ministries and public sector agencies.

Second, the operational plans for each government ministry and public sector agency, which cover in detail their programs and allocations for expenditure whereby they will implement the policies for development.

Third, the analysis and projections of the whole economy, its manpower resources, levels of economic activity, and sectoral composition of output and expenditure.

This volume is a summary of these three parts of the Plan, and describes the main features of the Kingdom's approach to development and the achievements to date; it explains the strategy for the Third Plan in the context of the Kingdom's long term objectives for development; and reviews the most significant programs and projects which will be implemented by the various government ministries and the public sector agencies during the Third Plan Period.
